OPINIONS.

Mackelohse's Picture of Sydney and Stranger's Guide, is a neat volume, embellished with forty-three well-executed engravings of the principal buildings and views in the colony; besides which, it contains some very interesting matter of the colony generally. Works of this nature should receive every encouragement from the Australian Public.—Gazette.

This little work contains a good deal of information interesting to a stranger, and, as a present to friends or relations "at home," we think it will be purchased with avidity. The numerous plates of the public buildings, and of views in and near Sydney, will render the book particularly pleasing to those in other countries who may desire to know what we really are like in this part of the world. The publisher must have been at no little expense and trouble in producing this book; we trust the profits of the sale will amply repay him.—Herald.

This little volume contains a great deal of valuable information, and cannot fail to prove highly useful to persons who are unacquainted with our metropolis. The engravings are strikingly correct, and they demonstrate that Australia is indeed advancing; while the literary part of the work must be considered as a very judicious compilation of important facts, illustrative of the history, commerce, and public institutions of the colony. It is a volume, over the pages of which, Mackelohse's name is so much pleased, and we have no doubt but that those individuals who purchase copies of it will experience similar gratification. We cannot do better, therefore, than recommend it to the notice of the public.—Colonist.

This is a useful and interesting work, and contains many valuable remarks and suggestions. A perusal of this book, humble as it is, will enable the inhabitants of Great Britain to form a more correct idea of the present state and prospects of Australia than Mr. James Mackelohse's publication. Every emigrant ought to provide himself with a copy of it as soon as he arrives, as it will afford him considerable information relative to his future plans of operation in the colony. Upon the whole, this work is one such as we have long required, and we doubt not but that Mr. Mackelohse will be amply rewarded for his exertions.—Australian.

Mackelohse's Picture of Sydney is remarkably calculated to gratify the friends and relations at home of the colonists, and through the same medium of giving a due celebrity to the colony, is a very thriving portion of the empire.—Newspaper.

This little book, is the first of the kind, and is certainly "a Guide to Strangers" in Sydney, and what is more, a compendium of Colonial information useful to the newly arrived emigrant, and amusing and interesting to the friends we're left behind. As such we commend the Picture of Sydney to public patronage, as conveying a very fair idea of the place. The work is interesting, and being calculated to ADVANCE AUSTRALIA, is deserving of encouragement.—Times.

"KNOWLEDGE IS POWER."

Fashion; that incubus, has invariably called for a preface, as the master of ceremonies, or introducer of a new publication, and that same fashion, requires also, that a new Journal, should upon being ushered forth to the world, announce the course the Editor intends adopting in the career he has chosen. That we are entitled to call this a new Journal, is unquestionable, although it retains the same name as one which, for nearly three years, pursued a course purely commercial. Our Journal while it embodies every thing necessary to give information in Commercial affairs will contain far more local and general information, commonly called "Reading Matter," than its predecessor, combined also with foreign affairs, information of general interest, and copious extracts from publications of approved merit. As to our politics, let it be understood that they are liberal—aye, LIBERAL; avoiding on the one hand, the scurrilous and unbecoming remarks, which vitiated appetites but too often indulge in, and on the other the fawning adulation, of a sycophant, who hold with Pope young is the time for harmless mirth and gaiety, it is one's own danger and temptation lurk most unseen. We can never forget the appropriate lines of a verse from an old ballad upon this subject.

"Oh! think not the world is an Eden of roses, When the young soul, in pleasure and freedom roves, And the few years scattered have many a thorn, And the hand that would pluck them too often is torn."

Such is a more sketchy outline of the principles upon which this Journal will be conducted under its new management.

We must now close this article, wishing our kind subscribers and readers a happy New Year, and until Saturday next, bidding them a warm adieu—adieu.

By the ship Alfred we are put in receipt of English papers to the 23d September. The public places of refuge which engaged with the elections of members of Parliament. The Corporation had gained ground in England, whilst the Ministers had gained more than counterbalancing success in Scotland and Ireland. The Elections had not however terminated. Her Majesty was still resident in Edinburgh Palace, when she daily admitted distinguished guests to her table. The King of Denmark had visited England for the purpose of personally congratulating Her Majesty on her accession. The civil war in Spain still rages, and the forces of Don Carlos had advanced nearer to the capital. Portugal was again in commotion, a strong party at the head of which is Marshal Saldanha had declared for re-electing the Charter of Don Pedro, which had been infringed by the National Guard, and no doubt entertained that it will be immediately restored. It is said, that but for the delicate situation of Her Majesty, the Royal Consort, Prince Ferdinand would have put himself at the head of the movement. There are rumors of revolutionary symptoms in Italy. Russia had carried war into Circassia, and her advanced columns had sustained a reverse.

The report that Captain Sir John Bromer, R.N., had been appointed to govern the new settlement of Port Phillip, is unfounded. We perceive that that gentleman had taken the command of the Albatross, fitting out for the survey of Torres' Straits.

The President appointment of Mr. Williams, an American consul at this Port, is recognised by the British Government. Our countrymen are mistaken in saying that the British Government appointed that gentleman; for to the British Government only belongs the right of recognition of the foreign appointment.

Some accounts of sales of wools in the London market have been received, which give a slight improvement in price, but nothing definite will be ascertained until the receipt of subsequent dates, as to 8,000 bales were to be offered in the market between the 12th and 16th of Sept. The wools are now coming freely into town, but for sales having been effected, the growers preferring to consign their wools to brokers, taking the advances of 1d. a lb. We have only heard of the sales of about 400 bales, at from 10d. to 15d.

The shipping interest suffer much from a very serious defect in the Law, respecting articles seaman, which was fully exemplified on Friday last, in the case of the barque Everetta, the master of which vessel brought up two of his seamen for refusing to do their duty; they knocked off for two days and would do nothing but lounge about, eat, drink, and smoke, in consequence a warrant was issued for them. They had no defence to make, except that they had no defence, which was denied. The Bench sentenced them to forfeit four days pay each; being two days pay for each day they refused duty, and the costs of the proceedings. This is a very pretty punishment for seamen refusing duty, who by this law, if they think fit, may knock off duty at a most critical time, getting in cargo, preparing the ship for sea, &c. &c. when it may be most important for the seamen to supply their places, upon forfeiting two days' pay. This is mere child's play—two days' pay indeed! A month upon the Tread Mill would be too little. This act requires an amendment for the protection of Master Mariners.

The Colonel's latest jeu d'esprit.—"Why am I?" said the Colonel to Jilks, the other day, "like the inside of a Barcelona nut?"

Jilks scratched his head, the lady laughs resource, To which embarrassed Jilks has recourse.

but nothing came therefrom—he was posed. Because in a Spanish Kernal (Colonel) said the chief checkmate at his wit. Jilks immediately dispatched a messenger for three penny worth of Barcelonas, to inspect and report progress.

On Wednesday night a robbery to a considerable extent was committed on the premises of Mr. Craig, landlord of the "Rob Roy" public house, Hunter-street. It appears that Mr. Craig kept his money in a box in his bedroom upon the first floor. On Wednesday he had been to it upon several occasions, and its contents were correct up to a late hour in the evening, when upon requiring change Mr. C. discovered that the lock had been picked and about fifty pounds in money and two watches stolen. Mr. Craig immediately gave to the police of the circumstance, and seeing Lawrence of the crown, one assigned to Mr. Wolcott, and the other to Mr. Saul Lyons, were taken into custody they having been for some in the house that evening in company with two other men who are since known to be runaways, and who are still at large. One of the runaways is named Walker, one of three brothers who is well known to the police as having been accounted the expertest of London thieves.

On Thursday afternoon, about 3 o'clock, as a native of Manila, named Kilo, was walking down George-street, he was accosted by three men who stopped and entered the public house into conversation with him, while the third, named James Lawrence, watching his opportunity, snatched the watch from Kilo's fob and made off with it; although Kilo was a native of Manila, and but little acquainted with the English language, he understood the difference between meum and tuum, and gave chase to the robber down Brickfield Hill; finding himself pressed hard, Lawrence threw away the watch which striking against a wall was broken; the Overseer of a club gang hearing the cry of "stop thief," and seeing Lawrence making down the hill he stopped him, and Kilo coming up, (he, Kilo,) commenced giving in Lawrence a sound thrashing, for having despoiled him of his watch; a constable at this moment coming up checked the argument ad hominem, which Kilo was applying, and took Lawrence into custody. The Bench thinking that his patience for Fichers was not the thing declined giving him any longer, and committed him for trial.

Cricket Match between the Union and Australian Clubs.

The noble and manly game of Cricket appears to be a peculiar favorite in this Colony; and deservedly so, joining, as it does, rational amusement with healthful recreation. This is one of the old and peculiar games of England, and we never feel more gratified than in seeing them transplanted to our adopted Country.

The match under review had been for some time thought of, and it was finally settled that it should come off upon the usual ground, at the old Race Course, the stakes being for £11 aside. Early on the morning of Thursday, workmen were to be seen erecting a couple of booths, from one of which was shortly displayed the St. George's Ensign of England, while from the other floated the Standard of Australia. These places of refuge were for the accommodation of the competitors, who partook of refreshments therein. Another booth by a speculator was erected for the use of the public, while a variety of the itinerant vendors of divers luxuries perambulated the Course.

The previous evening had been squally, and several heavy showers had fallen; fortunately they were beneficial, allaying the dust, and rendering the ground more adapted for the game. The weather throughout the day was rather chilly and overcast, but this rendered it more congenial for the players.

The hour of eleven was fixed upon for the commencement of the game, shortly after which the wickets were pitched, and the Members of the respective Clubs being upon the ground and prepared, the Union Club, having the toss, were put in by their competitors, Messrs. Henry Green and William Therrill umpires. The following was the result of the match.

REMARKS.

We have no hesitation in saying that the Australian Club was over-matched, although they showed excellent game and no finching. It could not be expected that inexperienced hands, like those belonging to the Australian side, could compete with the old stagers like those of the Union. The Union Club played with much spirit and judgment; in particular we noticed Lilas, who was unquestionably the best batsman, the most able scouter, and the swiftest runner: as to his abilities as a bowler we can pronounce no opinion, as he did not act in that capacity. When at the wicket his stops were admirable, and excited the admiration of the whole field. He obtained 46 notches from his own bat, being more than any other man. The bowling both of Puzey and Long on the same side was excellent, and contributed in no small degree to the victory; also Orford, whose excellent batting and fielding we particularly noticed. The greater portion of the Union Club were crack hands, and they did not fail to remember it in their play: upon the whole the fielding and bowling was excellent; two or three, however, who appeared to have been thrown in as a kind of make weight, might have been spared without robbing the Club of any portion of the honors of the day. The Australians, from his well known prowess with the bat, and his ability in bowling, we thought had not misplaced their confidence with the former; he obtained more notches than any of his own side, and as a bowler he maintained his former reputation. On the same side we must not forget to mention Rowley, a very young man, who on this occasion made his debut in a match; his bowling astonished the spectators, and his bowling astonished the natives well as a Cricketer if he is careful in his practice, and avoids that too common error of hitting at every thing without remembering that safeguard of a Cricketer—the stop. He might copy from Lilas with advantage. The batting of Gardner was very good, but the bowling of Puzey was too much for him. The remainder of the Australians struggled hard for victory, but the occasion was not destined to encircle their brows. They are not however daunted by defeat, and we understand that they again intend entering the arena.

This terminated this match, upon the result of which some scores were exchanged hands, and we feel a pleasure in stating that the whole affair passed off with as perfect good humour as we feel in recording it. The assemblage of persons of all grades was numerous, and they appeared to enjoy the scene. When the match had been closed, a young man mounted a horse, and taking the St. George's Banner in his hand proceeded at a slow pace towards Mr. Puzey's, the crowd following in George-street, followed by the Union Club, and a large number of spectators. Upon arriving at the house, those interested entered and partook of the good things prepared by "Mime Host" for the occasion. Thus ended the long-talked-of Cricket Match. We understand the return Match will be played on Monday week.

Monday being New Year's day, immediately upon the stroke of 12 on Sunday night, the Town Band commenced parading the streets, playing a variety of lively tunes, few of which, however, were above mediocrity. A favorite tune, "The Old English System of playing the old year out and the new one in."

On Saturday night, the wife of Mr. Ferny-hough, the Zincographer, of Jamieson-street, upon retiring to rest, placed her rings upon the dressing table; the following morning finding herself unwell she took breakfast in bed, which was brought up by an assigned female servant; no one else had access to the room: the woman having times in and out of the room half-a-dozen times, Mr. Ferny-hough upon casting his eyes upon the rings, remarked that one of them was missing, and immediately charged the woman with having stolen them; this she denied; as she was the only person who had access to the room, she was immediately given into custody. The value of the ring is two guineas; it contains a cats-toe-eye and the circular part is twisted like a cable; it is of French manufacture and filled green.

Our readers will perceive in another portion of this Journal, a charge brought against Charles Kellick, an aboriginal of the Manning River tribe, for robbing the Trial Ketch, of a chest of tea. After being removed from the bar he volunteered some evidence as to where the tea was to be found, and was conveyed under the charge of some trusty constables to the place he pointed out, being the river side; having looked about for some time, he drew off to the attention of the constables by a false scent, when he immediately took the water, crossed to the opposite side, scaled the rocks which frowned upon him, and plunged into the screening underwood of his native land, before which, however, he turned round upon the uppermost pinnacle of his ascent and howled and wailed "Charley who stood grouped together upon the opposite bank, in stoung 'twas misery to hear." This appalling farrow of Kellick's roused their stagnant blood, and fifty schemes were devised and as quickly put on one side touching the capture of woolly-head, but they finally found that the best way was to bid him good night, (we think far ever) and return to inform the Colonel of the facts.

CAUTION TO PARTIES UNDER THE NECESSITY OF BUYING WATER.—On Saturday a constable observed a rascally driver of a water-cart, filling his cask out of one of the stagnant puddles in the Quarries; thick, green and slimy; suspecting something wrong by such an act, he watched his further motions and saw him drive into Prince-street, and commenced his vociferation by calling "Water O!" The constable taxed him with his villany, and the jeopardy in which he was placing people's lives, when the fellow commenced blubbering and said, that he only did it to "to pars an honest penny;" but he pronounced never to be guilty of the like again. We have a strong impression that the fellow could be indicted for fraud, by obtaining money under false pretences, in selling water injurious to health, for wholesome water. At all events there should be some law to put down so dangerous a practice.

CAUTION TO BAILIFFS.—On Thursday Benjamin Kirby was placed at the bar of the Police Office, charged with having assaulted a bailiff named William Sullivan, who stated that on the previous day he had been in possession of the Court of Request, and was in Elizabeth-street to execute it; finding him standing at the door arrested him, upon which Kirby assaulted and ill-treated him; thereupon a warrant was issued by the Bench, which caused Kirby's appearance before the Court. Sullivan having handed to the Bench the Execution upon which he acted, Colonel Wilson inquired to know if he had in the first place made search for, or enquired if Kirby was a bailiff; Sullivan replied "No, he did not think it necessary." The Colonel then read to him the following sentence from the execution:—"You are commanded to levy of the goods and effects of Benjamin Kirby. And if you shall not find any goods or effects belonging to the said defendant whereof to levy, then, &c." the remainder relates to the apprehension of the person. Sullivan acknowledged that he had made search for Kirby, and that he had taken him to his old doctrine "that he did not think it necessary." Kirby remarked that he was not in the house at the time goods belonging to himself amounting to the value of £30. The Bench held that Sullivan had committed the first assault, and that Kirby, under the circumstances of the case, was justified in repelling it, and the complaint was therefore dismissed. Sullivan walked round from the witness box towards the dock, exultingly flourishing the Execution, when Kirby enquired if he could be arrested there, to which the Bench rejoined, "Certainly not in that Court," and ordered the Constables to remove both parties, putting one out of each gate of the Police Office yard; this was done, Kirby being put into York and Sullivan into George-street. Sullivan stood peeping through the iron railings at his opponent, as a cat would watch a mouse, to observe what course he intended steering, when Kirby darted off like an arrow, as though making for Fruit-street; Sullivan reached the wall by the seeing watch-house in an instant, but not seeing Kirby was expected, concluded that he had gone into Kirby's public-house at the corner of York and Drury-streets, and went in search; upon going into the kitchen he discovered his prize stowed away in a corner and hid from view in a most ingenious manner. Kirby, finding himself discovered, rushed from his hiding-place, shouting, "Lay on, Macduff! Lay on—be he who first cries hold—enough."

A desperate combat ensued—to speak in theatrical language, and pots, pans, kettles, wash-basins, together with frying pans and gridirons, were kicked hither and thither with-out the slightest consideration. The hubbub was immense—Waterloo was a fool to it. The destruction made in the kitchen caused them to be ejected into the street, when Kirby, having now plenty of room for his arms, left Sullivan's head in a most astounding pickle. While crowing victory another bailiff named Burn, who had procured the Execution from Sullivan, tapped Kirby on the shoulder, and bore him off to "duress vale."

On Thursday last, James Barnett, the master of the Ketch Trial belonging to Mr. Abraham, received on board with other goods, three chests of tea, for conveyance to Wollongong. Among his crew Barnett had an aboriginal named Charles Kellick, belonging to the Manning River Tribe, who had made several voyages with him, and in whom he placed the most implicit confidence. Having occasion to go on shore, he left Kellick in charge of the Ketch; upon returning in the evening he found that Kellick had left the vessel, not thinking anything wrong he went to bed. Kellick returned during the night. The following morning Barnett discovered that a chest of tea had been stolen from the hold, when the following dialogue ensued between him and Kellick? Barnett—Where one fellow chest of tea? Kellick—Bale, only two fellow. Barnett—Why, you crammer one chest? Kellick—Bale, (with astonishment). Barnett—You shall never see crammer tea and I give you one shilling. Kellick—White fellow crammer. Barnett—White fellow, who? Kellick—Bill. Search was accordingly made for Bill, who was found drinking in a public-house in Sussex-street, and was taken into custody. When a constable pulled towards the Ketch, to secure Kellick, he took the boat and endeavored to make for the opposite shore; finding the stable gain on him he took the water, but without effect; his pursuer gained upon and captured him. The parties stand remained. An impudent fellow was brought before the police the other day, who told the constable that took him into custody, that he much better walk about "with his nose well soaped, for that he intended to pull it soundly the first time that he met."

On the afternoon of Friday last, about half past four o'clock, Aird and his wife left home, in Elizabeth-street, leaving in charge of the house an assigned man servant. Upon their return a quarter to seven, they found that some one had during their absence broken open and much damaged a chest of drawers in their bed-room, and had stolen therefrom 1 ladies' gold watch, 1 silver watch, 12 silver forks, 11 silver spoons. The assigned servant stated, that he had during their absence, seen a man come down stair with the spoons, forks, and silver watch; he followed him when he dropped those articles, but made off with the gold watch. It appears also that, shortly before the robbery, Mr. Aird had in his service a woman named Mary Hughes, who had just obtained a Ticket-of-leave, whom there is no doubt was concerned in the robbery, as she was only person who knew where the property was kept, and she had sworn to have revenge when discharged a few days before, for habitual intoxication; she is in custody, and Mr. Aird described her as the most worthless character in Sydney, to whom a Ticket-of-leave could have been given.

THEATRE.

On Monday evening last the high wrought drama of The Jewess was repeated, want of space and time prevents us entering into details, but its production reflects great credit on the part of Mr. LAZAR, for his indefatigable exertions, in spite of the very inefficient Corps that he has the management of, more particularly as to produce so difficult a piece in the present state of Theatricals. Mr. Murray on this occasion appeared as Leopold, a character formerly sustained by Spencer; really if we may judge by his able performance of this very arduous character, the absence of the latter Gentleman will not be materially felt. Lee, one of the most useful men that ever appeared among us, hit off to the life the gay merry Englishman, Foster. Cameron as the Cardinal was respectable. Lazar as the Jew portrayed the fond feeling of the parent with truth, his conception of the character was excellent. Mrs. Taylor's Rachel, the Heroine of the Drama, may be safely pronounced one of the best pieces of acting that has ever been witnessed on these boards: her love for her parent; her attachment to her faith; and her passion for the Prince were well portrayed; her representation of the "Dark Eyed Jewess," was excellent, and her superb Oriental dresses were in strict keeping with the Costume of the time; her talent and her exertion in this arduous and beautifully drawn character, was repeatedly rewarded by long and loud applause. Mrs. Downes is an improving actress, her Princess Eudasia, was a very happy performance. Mrs. Clark appeared as Abigail, and sang the "Maids of Judah" very prettily, and was honored with an encore; and "the last not least" our juvenile Duverney, Miss Lazar danced with grace and taste, a favorite "the Seal." The Scenery was excellent, the Dresses and Music very appropriate, and the Curtain descended amid rapturous applause. We have also to remark that Aladdin has been played by very good houses, and since the opening of the Theatre it has been well and respectfully attended. Correspondent.
