Wreck of the Lucinda.

The Success arrived here from a coasting voy age on Friday last, bringing up with her Cap tain Thomas James, the surgeon, mate, and sur vivors of the crew of the London whaler Lueinda, which unfortunate vessel was wrecked on an unknown reef, E. by N. distance 75 miles from the N. W. of New Caledonia, and 1000 miles distant from this harbour. The Lucinda was the property of Messrs, John Wilson & Co. of London; she had been out 25 months, and had obtained 1500 barrels. The following is taken from the log book of the Lucinda, which we understand, does not pourtray one half of the safferings of the unfortunate men. January 20, 1838-The day commenced with squally and hazy weather—the rain coming down in torrents, standing S.SE, wind east, and sailing under double recfed topsails, jib and spanker. At 7 p. M. took in the jib and tacked to N.E. and N.N.E., at 11 wore to S.S.E., the wind being still stormy from the east. At two. the ship got on a very extensive reef not laid down in any of my charts and books, the third mate, Mr. Bateman, having the watch. The morning being very hazy, we could not see what part of the rect we were on. On finding it an mpossibility to save her, we prepared our boats with bread and water and some clothing for each of us, and also a quadrant and compass. when we auxiously awaited the approach of day light. At 5 c. M., when in the act of letting down her larboard boat, her starboard bilge gave way, and she went down with a tremendous erash on her beam ends, when I, as commander of the ship, and some of the crew had to slide down her copper into the boats. The dreadful harror and auxiety of mind I now felt is beyond description here I had 29 poor miserable souls packed up in four whale boats, and were perhaps never to see the light of another day proposed to go to Moreton Bay, on the coast of New Holland, that being the only civilized place near us, which was a distance of nearly 1000 miles. This proposition was agreed to. and we started, steering S, by E, half S, for Le-hurt's Islands to the leeward of Calcalonia. The sea at this time was running very high, accom-panied with strong gales. The boats shipped a deal of water, which damaged the whole of our bread. At noon, we were unable to get an observation. Sanday, January 21-This day commenced with strong gales from the east, with cloudy weather and a high sea. At dusk, the land in sight (bearing S.S.W.) and about six leagues off -we were close into the reef, but could not find any passage-laid too all night outside the reef. About the middle of the night we had moderate breezes and smooth water. At da light made sail to the W., at S. 30. A. M. found a channel in the reef, and stood over to Leburt's Islands-at noon, strong cales and cloudy -latitude by observation 10, 21, 8, the lee land bearing S.W. by S. by compass.

was all damaged with salt water. On this island, we found fresh water and a few cocoawhich were very acceptible to us

Tuesday, January 23-At daylight, we perceived some natives approaching, we, therefore, ecived some natives approaching, we, therefore, immediately put to sea. The natives made signs to us to come on shore, but we thought the contrary course most advisable. We afterwards pulled round to another bay, where there was a beautiful valley thickly studded with cocounuts. The natives still wanted us to go on shore,—they brought us a white tappec as an emblem of peace; I gave them a fine dow, which they they brought us a write tappee as an emblem of peace; I gave them a fine dog, which they seemed very fond of, they gave us nothing in exchange, but they got hold of my bout, but I still refused—we then steered S.W. for the French reef in hopes to find a passage. At noon, found the reef all compact, and no passage. Steered N.N.W.—latitude by observation 19 21. S.

Wednesday, January 21-The first part of this day we had a fresh breeze and fine winds steering N.N.W. At 4 P.M., passed through a channel of the reef, and hauled to the S.W. At sun set, spoke the other boats, and it wasagreed on by all hands that we should endeavour to on by all hands that we should endeavour to keep company, and accordingly our boat carried a light.

Thursday, January 25—Nothing of any con-sequence occurred this day, with the exception of a boy fulling overboard, he was, however, rescued—longitude by account 160 50E., latitude, observation 20, 53, 8.

Friday, January 26—Nothing particular occurred with the account of eurred, with the exception of a most tragical event. We had laid to, which was done by tying all the boats together, when the following murder was committed on board the Captain's boat. A native of the Kingsmill groupe, whom the Captain, some time before, had taken off Stewart's Island, had, since the loss of the ship, become particularly sullen and inactive; suddenly, and without the slightest provocation, rose from his seat, and deliberately plunged his open knife into the neek of a lad named James Rogers, and then cut him several times in the face. The wound in the neck was about 2 inches the left side. The poor lad was in great agony, but death soon released him from his decadful sufferings. The savage then made an attrmpt on the life of a fellow black, who was severel cut in the hand in defending himself. He then again attempted another murder by attacking a boy named George Davis. He got Davis down in the boat, and made a plunge at his head with the knife with such force as to cut through two flaunch shirts and a thick waistcoat; but for tunately only grazed the skin. The captain and some of the crew then rushed on the black, secured him, and flung him overboard. He was no sooner in the water than he tore off his shirt, and brandishing his knife, sung out in his native language for anybody to come to him there; and told the native who was left in the boat to finish the work he had begun. We left him there to perish, and run about two miles to leeward, fear-ing that having his knife with him he might do the boats some injury, or cut away the oars. We then committed the body of the unfortunate Rogers to the deep, and hove to for the night.

At daylight we had less sea and more moderate -made sail and steered S.W. At this period we found that Mr. Buckles' boat had become very leaky, and, on inspection, found her not trust worthy; we therefore divided the crew amongst the other boats, took out the bread and the water, lightened our own boats by throwing a quantity of clothing overboard, and abandoned the leaky

Saturday, January 27.-This day began with strong breezes and a rugged sea. About 30" p.m. we saw a sea flying into Mr. Bateman's boat -took our oars up and stood towards him, when, to our great surprise, the boat capsized bottom up, and nine souls were immersed in the foaming ocean—now our situation became quite critical— to see our fellow sufferers perish before us, was hard, and to take them in our boats was danger ous-but we took them in: we had now thirteen hands in each boat, and the wind blowing agale and a high sea. I then proposed to throw every thing overboard, except what we had on our backs, and the small quantity of bread and water. myself and the chief mate commenced, and every one followed the example. I threw overboard all my own clothing, my chronometer, my writing desk, containing the whole of the ship's papers Monday, January 22—Till about noon we had moderate breezes from S.E. and E.S.E. —at 4 r.m. we landed at Lehart's Islands. We did not see any natives—we hauled the boats up for the night, and dried our clothes—the bread was all damaged with salt water. On this compelled to cast off. We turned our boats, heads to the sea, and kept plying with our oars, fully expecting every minute to meet with a watery grave. After an anxious watch, daylight broke, and with it we had more moderate wea-ther; at sunrise set sail and steered S.W. by W., the sun level with the stern of the boats, at noon

About 4 p. m. our spirits were greatly damped by seeing the land tend to the eastward, and at sun-set to our mortification found ourselves in Hervey's Bay being about 50 miles too far to the westward, and the wind east, there was no other alterna-tive but to row across, and this course was immediately adopted, but at midnight a breeze sprang up to the southward which soon in-creased, and at 9 a, m. we sent people on shore to look for water—they returned without having We then endeavoured to catch some fish, and only succeeded in catching one dog fish -made sail to the N W to go round Sandy Cape and Indian Head, but it blowing strong, we have to between the two heads. Thursday, February 1. Strong breeze and hard squalls with light showers of rain, the first and middle parts of the day. P. M., found very little surf on the beach and no appearance of natives, we landed and hauled the boats up, and proceeded in search of fresh water, which we found a few yards from the beach. Here we nade a fire and cooked the dog fish, which being only a small portion to each, cut very delicious We found here a small bean resembling in size and taste the horse bean; we all eat some of them, and in a few hours some of us were taken exceedingly ill, being seized with vomiting and exceedingly in, being seized with voniting and slight jurging. At sunset hauled our boats higher up, made a lurge fire, and hid ourselves down to sleep. It being at that time a calm, we immediately rowed after her, and at 6 a. m. reached the sides of the Success of Sydney Captain Dixon, who immediately took us on board, took our boats on board also, and accommodated us with such as his vessel afforded.

It will be seen by the above, that the Captain, mate, and the whole of the crew have met with severe losses-in fact they have lost every thing they were possessed of. We are happy to state that a subscription is about being entered into for their relief, which we are sure a generous public will not fail to subscribe to .- Australian

"Knowledge is power." Lord Bacon

WE have received per brig Bee, from naunceston, the Cornwall Chronicle to the 3d instant. The worthy Editor has penned a long phillippic entitled " Church Extorproving that the sum of £53,000 will be netted by the Church in the alloting out portions of the burial ground attached to St. John's Church, Launceston, for the reception of the dead. This piece of land is only of one acre in extent, and the Editor asserts it to be public property; if so, this is indeed an extortion .- The Government offices at Launceston are to be concentrated. Sir John Franklin and suite have returned from their visit to Flinders' Island. His Excellency expressed himself pleased with the aboriginal establishment.-The capture of the notorious bushranger Britton by one of Dr. Imlay's men is confirmed; the schooner Eliza has been despatched for him to Twofold Bay, to return to Hobart Town. -The Markets are firm at the following quotations :- Wheat 7s.6d. to 8s. per bushel; Barley 6s. to 7s.; Oats 4s.; Flour from DUEL PREVENTED .- On Friday evening some misunderstanding arose between Lieut R-n residing at the Royal Hotel, and Mr. C. C--1 the result of which was a confidential message and a meeting for the following morning agreed upon. Unfortunately one of those misnomers called friends made the matter known to the cance menus made the matter known to the authorities at the P. O. and the belligerents were captured and obliged to find bail to keep the peace. A very foolish affair indeed—if per sons think fit to let a little fiery blood by means of a half of the state of the st of a bullet instead of a lancet, why we conceive they have a right to do so.

On the night of Thursday week last a man named George M'Donald went to the house of Archibald M'Cowen, in Cumberland-street; upon going to bed he had on his person a case containing his certificate of freedom, and at the bottom a £50 note; before going to sleep he remembered some one flinging their arms around him; upon awaking he felt for the box, and found it had been removed to another pocket: this caused him to be suspicious, and upon ex amining it he found that the note was stolen He informed M'Cowen of the circumstance, who immediately turned him out of doors, saying that if he wanted a lodging he must go and get one. The same evening M'Cowan went to a public house kept by one Kennedy, and asked him for change for a £50 note. Kennedy said tha he had it not, when M'Cowan replied that " it was of no consequence—if he would not change t somebody else would," and went away. day or two afterwards M'Cowan went to Mi Mitchell's, the shipchandler, and wished to de-posit some money with him, which he did to the amount of £37, and a receipt payable on demand was made out in his favor. Mr. Mitchell expressed his surprise that he had so much money, when M'Cowan replied that it was the proceeds of the sale of a piece of land. M'Cowan gave his name to Mr. Mitchell as Alexander Cameron. He is committed.

On Sunday night a man named John Rams den was found lying drunk behind a heap of stones near the quarries. Upon being taken to the watch house, and coming to his senses, he found that his watch and money had vanished during the wandering of his ideas.

On Saturday the woman Rachel Isaacs, mentioned in our last, was fully committed for robbing Mrs. Evison of two sovereigns and three

Two lads, named Alexander Cargo and Joseph Moss, the pair averaging the height of a couple of quart blacking bottles, were charged at the Police Office on Monday with robbing the garden of Mr. West of apples and sundry other fraits. A witness named Peg was called to contra diet the evidence of a constable on Monday, but the Colonel appeared to give but little head to it, remarking that the prisoner had better provide himself with something more substantial for that the Peg would not support him.

Moore, for the murder of Mr. Hosking, the butcher at Maitland, will be executed at that place on Baturday next.

THE THEATRE.

On Saturday night was again performed the Drama of Charles the Twelfth. The only visible difference from its previous representation was, that Mr. Riley was more perfect, and conse quently did more justice to the character of Muddlework than on Thursday last. The afterpiece was Melmoth, the Wanderer, and Walburg, the Victim. Our remarks upon the performance of this piece in our last apply to Saturday night

On Monday evening was produced for the first time here, a farce in two acts, entitled, The Lady and the Devil. The name is an anomaly, for what his satanic majesty has to do with the lady, or the lady with him; except perhaps that spice of the devil possessed from him by all womankind, we know not. The piece itself is lively and entertaining, and with another representation or so, will go off trippingly. Mr. Munyard was successful as Captain Wildlove, more especially so, when we take it into consideration, that he was called upon to enact a character out of his line of business. Mr. Cameron as Llaudian, avoided much of his usual hesitation of manner, which it is painful to witness. Sig-nor Rafael was outrageously burlesqued by Mr. Stanton. Mr. Lee played with much spirit the part of Jeremy, having a considerable aversion to his eyes being filled with snuff, although ad-ministered by the hand of a lady. Mrs. Taylor overdid the character of Zephyrina, she was lively, sentimental, tragic, and melo-dramatic in a breath; 'twas too much of a weather-cockish performance to please us; it required more con sistency, and not so quick a transition from signaye to gay, from lively to severe." Mrs. Downes had her face blackened as Negombo, that was the only merit we could distinguish either in her or her performance. We must not how ever cavil with the manner in which she got through her part, as it happened to be precisely in her line. We are glad to see that the manager has so much good sense as to dis member her from the higher walks. The farce took well, and as a light amusing trifle, we should say would become a favourite. In the last scene we observed an ornament hanging from the centre of Mr. Munyard's back, which upon close inspec-tion we discovered to be a squib; having been informed of the annoyances, the petty jealousies, and the feuds, which the very brotherly and sisterly company had at various times got up against this gentleman, we should not have been urprised at any course adopted towards him which could bear the name of a joke; but the idea of appending fireworks to an actor taking the leading character, (and to that we attribute the cause) was such an outrazeous insult to the audience, so gross a breach of propriety, that we were of opinion Mr. Lazar was taking a nap, and therefore did not see the transpetion. We can assure some of the Sydney company, who appear to set all decency at defiance, that the day is rapidly approaching when they will find, that character will have something to do in forming a theatrical company, and that brazen impudence will be kicked and scouted from the pinnacle it at present has had the audacity to usurp; and when that time does arrive, we shall most freely bestow our comments upon the deserving and the undeserving. To the farce succeeded, "mention it not in Gath," for the first time, that highly entertaining song of The Shovel and Broom. Just, gentle reader, imagine Mr. Dyball, upon the rise of the cartain, rush in ar rayed in the habiliments of a sweep, true to nature, no disguise, all unsophisticated—the song commences, but notwithstanding our utmost en-deavours to follow the words of the singer, the last line of each verse only could we catch, viz., the Shovel and Broom; before the last word had died upon the ear, round went Mr. Dyball in the muzes of the waltz, beating time with a re galar built shovel and broom. No doubt the song possesses considerable merit, but we in our ence could discover nothing but vulgarity of the lowest grade; but there must have been merit, for the gods encored and enjoyed the re-pitition with much gout. By the bye, if this song is again to disgrace the boards, we will just throw out a hint by which it might be improved. From a solo transform it into a duett, a la Polly Hopkins; play the Lady and the Devil first piece, then Mrs. Downes, whose face being ready blackened for the chrracter of Negombo, might chum chum with Mr. Dyball by taking the second, and making one in the die is to be filled by such attractions, we shall feel no manner of surprise in seeing so heterogeneous

On Sunday morning a person named John Denah, observing a hair broom under the verandah of Mr. Quin's house in Kent-street, he thought it would answer his purpose, so shoul dering it as a soldier would his musket, he was making off with it when he was taken into

Edward and Elizabeth Booker were yesterday fully committed to take their trials for hav ing in their possession books stolen from the house of Mr. Kirk, of Cumberland-street, know ing them to be stolen

Speam On.-This useful and necessary arti cle, one of the staples of the Colony, to be ob-tained in its purest state, has been always a desideratum. With a view of supplying the inhabitants of Sydney with this article in its primitive state, Mr. Wood of King street, Government Lamp Contractor, has established works for that purpose, where the public may be assured of obtaining it pure and gonuine.

On Saturday afternoon, upon Mr. Payne, of Campbell street, returning to his residence, he found a child standing in the hall, and enquired of her what she wanted, to which she replied, that she awaited the return of her mother. had gone up stairs; upon proceeding thither Mr. P. found a woman of very suspicious appearance peeping in at the bed room door, and asked her what she wanted; she replied that she called to see a Mrs. Marshall. She was given into oustady, and the Bonch sout her to juil for three mouths us a rogue and rugabond.

We call the attention of Mr. Ryan, the newly appointed Inspector, to a notorious nuisance in the Clarence street portion of his parish. A house purporting to be kept by a man named Ryder, purporting to be kept by a man handle kyder, a harnessmaker, a few doors from King-street, is inhabited by such troublesome custoffiers as to disturb the whole neighbourhood; and the most conspicuous of its inmates in these nightly disturbances, which are a disgrace to the town, is a fellow named Ford, or the "foot ball carver," a name which he has carned by being kicked about from one cabinetmaker to another, visit. the Police Office, and paying occasional visits to the Treadmill and Gaol. If the Police do their duty, such nuisances are easily and effectually put down: let them file informations, and they will not want for evidence.

PARRAMATTA .- A meeting of the Members of the Parramatta Benevolent Society took place on Thursday Evening last. H. M'Arthur, Esq. in the Chair. When the rules and intentions of the Society were read and adopted, a subscription was entered into, and £153 collected, which has since been augmented to £200. We feel great pleasure in recording the prosperity of this very laudable Society, and carnestly re-commend those who have not yet come forward to make as little delay as possible, in affording aid to an Institution which has for its basis the dispensing such extensive good.

CORONER'S INQUEST .- On Friday, an inquest was held at Mr. Murdock's public-house, Pitt-street, upon the body of a female named Mary Robertson, who died the previous day from the excessive use of ardent spirits. The jury re. turned a verdict of died by the visitation of God.

A smart little cutter, between 30 and 40 tons, was launched last week at the Williams' River. and named the Jane Patterson. She is built for Mr. Magner of Market street, by Mr. Marshall.

On Friday night, a person named Francis Bigg, who had come into Sydney from Liverpool, fell in with Patrick Sowden and Mary Ann Sowden, with whom he had some previous ac quaintance; he accompanied them home-after supper he went to bed and fell asleep; about one o'clock he was awoke by hearing a noise at his bed side, and found the woman standing therehe asked her what she wanted there, and upon examining the pockets of his trowsers, found that he had been robbed of one five pound note, one pound, and sixteen shillings in silver, a pair one pound, and sixteen shiftings in silver, a pair of spectacles, minus one of the glusses, and a piece of paper upon which he had made some memorandams; he charged her with the robbery, which she denied. While dressing, he While dressing, he heard the woman and the female conversing in a low tone of voice; he went for a constable, who, upon searching the premises, found under a stone in the yard two skeleton keys, and the piece of paper with the memorandums in the water butt; the woman, upon being taken into custody, said, that all the money she had upon her was two sixpences and five pence farthi copper money, but upon her being searched in the watch house, six and sixpence was found in her bosom. Both prisoners are committed.

On Friday night, a gentleman sent to the vatch house apon the Race course, and informed the constable in charge that a man was in Elizabeth street armed with a gun, with which he was threatening the lives of passers by. Upon going out he found a man named James Morris armed with a fowling piece; three dogs were with him, at one of which he presented the gun, saying, "I'll shoot you." He was secured and locked up for the night. Upon the gun being examined, it was found not to be loaded. On aturday morning, having paid five shillings for his drunken conduct, he was allowed to depart, mving been duly admonished.

On Friday afternoon, a man named Michael Piggot, was taken into custody on a charge of stealing hay from Wilson Brothers' Wharf, which he had carried off to the value of eighteen shillings. The hay was being landed from the Tropic.

"He said he'd fib ME."—Such was the por-tion of a charge preferred by Captain William Newby of the Duchess of Kent against Mr. Philips White Cullin, Doctor of the same vessel, besides spitting in his face, and divers other unmedical like proceedings. The cause was a deficiency in the allowance of brandy and water which the Doctor patronised, and the effect what we have above described. The Captain's object being merely to protect himself - Mr. Cullin was ordered to find bail, to restrain his fibbing propensities, himself in £40, and two sureties in £20 each. Mr. Cullin appeared after all to consider himself hardly done by, and complained of the annoyances he received on board the vessel.

A Fish-Market is much wanted. A small building in an airy situation, and centrical, would be all that is required. The supply of fish, and the means of obtaining it, are at the present time miserable.

There is now no doubt but that the Elizabeth cutter, in search of which the Revenue Cutter, Ranger, was despatched by the Acting Governor, has foundered in a gale of wind, and all hands perished.
