Mr. N. L. Kentish has announced to the mem-bers of the Mechanics' Institute, and the inhabitants of Sydney, that he will deliver four Lectures at the Mechanics' School of Arts, " or New South Wales, its present state, and future prospects." Monday evening next is set down for the first Lecture.

Ryan v Wilson .- This case with others, was put off till next term, in consequence of the difficulty of procuring special jurors. Amongst those turned over, was Hall v M*Echeran.

Court of Petty Sessions, Windsor.

SATURDAY, 13TH OCTOBER, 1838.-Before the Police Magistrate, Samuel North, Esq.—William Smith, an assigned servant to Mr. John Odell, was put to the bar on a charge of drunkenness, found guilty, but on the recommendation of his master, and his former good conduct, was admonished and discharged.

James Corbett, an assigned servant to John Norman, of Wilberforce, was charged by his mistress with being drunk and abusing her, the prisoner however, received a good character for honesty and industry, and at the earnest soli-citation of his master and mistress, he was admonished and discharged.

Tuesday, 16th October, 1838.—Before William Cox, J. P.—Joseph Sheehan, an incorrigible, assigned to Robert Martin, of Rich mond, was charged with disobedience and in solence, was found guilty, and sentenced to receive a punishment of 25 lashes.

Louisa Burgess, per ship, "John Renwick," asssigned to Samuel North, Esq., J. P., was charged with absenting herself without permission, and sentenced to three days solitary confinement.

On Tuesday last, the 9th instant, as William Jilks, son of Mr. George Jilks, Chief Constable of Windsor, was returning home to Windsor, from Pitt Town, where he had been on business, he was met on the road by a man, whose face was concealed with a black silk handkerchief, who ordered him to dismount from the poncy, upon which he was riding. He took the poncy into the Bush, some short distance from the road, the lad still watching his movements; he saw him strike the poney on the eye with the handle of a whip; the poney by some means got away and the lad ultimately recovered him, rode home to Windsor, and reported the cir camstance, when the Constables were instantly despatched in search of the fellow, but could not find him, owing to the almost impenetrable state of the Bush, a little beyond where the occurrence took place.

On Thursday morning last, His Honor, the Commissioner, arrived at Windsor. The Court was opened about Eleven o'clock, with 208 cases on the List for adjudication, and the whole of them were gone through early on the afternoon

Windsor, 16th October, 1838.

SALES BY AUCTION.

Waines, Crant.

To Merchants, Gentlemen in Public Offices, retired Tradesmen, Botanists, and others.

J. T. WILSON

Has much pleasure in announcing that he has been honored with positive instructions from the Proprietor to submit to public competition, on TUESDAY, the 23rd instant, at halfpast eleven for twelve o'clock, at his extensive Sale Rooms, 74, George-street.

THE undermentioned Splendid Property being a portion of the LAND which was divided into Allotments a short time ago, and known to all New South Wales as Waines' Grant. The one side of this Estate is bounded by that Property equally well known as the PETERSHAM ESTATE. And the remaining sides by Government Roads; it should also be borne in mind, that whatever direction the eye may traverse, it can-not fail to rest on one of the Properties of the following Gentlemen, whose splendid Esta-blishments are contiguous to the undermentioned Allotments, viz:—those of R. Campbell, M. C.; S. Lord; J. Lord; L. Duguid, F. W. Unwin; A. B. Sparke, and J. H. Ebhart, Esquires. Lot 5 of all the original plan, measuring 2a. 1r. 30p., contains a great portion of that land, known to all residents in the neighbourhood, as Old Garden.

It is bounded on the north by a Government eserved road 66 feet wide, on the east by Lot 6 of former Sale, and on the south by Lot 7, and on the west by Lot 4.

Lot 8 is a corner allotment, being bounded on the west, north, and east by Government reserved roads, and on the south by Lot 9 of this Sale, it contains la. 1r. 20p., and from its conspicuous situation is adapted to a variety of purposes.

Lot 9 is bounded on the north by Lot 8, on the east by the road to Cook's River, 66 feet wide, on the south by Lots 10 and 11, and on the west by a reserved road 22 feet wide, and contains 3a. Ir. 25p.

Lot 10 is bounded on the south and west by reserved roads, and on the north and east by Lots 9, 11, 12, and contains 2a. 3r. 30p.

Lot 11 contains 3a. 1r., and is bounded on the north by Lot 9, on the east by Cook's River road, on the south by Lot 12, and on the west by Lot 10. Lot 12 contains three acres, and is bounded on the west and south by Lot 10 and reserved road, and on the east and North by Cook's River road and Lot 11. Lot 13, is another corner allotment; it con tains 1a. 2r. 25p., and is bounded on the east, south, and west by Cook's River and reserved road, and the south east corner pin is at the junction of the roads from Cook's River to Sydney, a government reserved road crossing it and the road leading to Cook's River.

The above described properties situated in the most beautiful part of New Town, is allowed by the most esteemed judges to excel in scenery any part of the environs of this metropolis, and in support of this opinion it has been remarked that the Aristocracy—en masse assemble in this neighbourhood.

The Highate of Australia,

Its proximity to Sydney, renders at particularly adapted to merchants, invalids, or others, whose mental powers in their busy career of business are drawn to the finest threads, and who consequently require solitude and seclusion to restore them. It is almost needless to point out the rapid progress which is being made in the erection of

sary public buildings, and the

is duly installed into his office, must enhance the value of this property tenfold—then will arize in the minds of those who may neglect this favorable opportunity, the question, why did I let pass a chance that would have realized me

One Hundred per Centum on my Capital outlayed.
The Soil is richly alluvial, and a portion of it in the highest state of cultivation, which renders it admirably adapted for the introduction of Market Gardens and Nurseries—the profitable result of which is fully elucidated in the Overflowing Purses of Mr. Henderson and others, who have earned to themselves an everlasting fame by their attention to, and their improvements in the

BOTANY IN BOTANY BAY. To the Parent or Guardian, this Property offers a certain return of an Immense Profit on the investment of Capital; -indeed such as rarely occurs even in this Interest loving Community; and the Auctioneer would add, that although it is quite the order of the day to

PUFF LAND, he feels quite assured the merits of these Allot-ments will be appreciated by a discerning Public, and the Advertisement be received and read as it is intended.

To Gentlemen who prefer the honors of watching over their country's weal, to seeking bubble reputation at the cannons mouth, and thus look forward to the enrolling their names on the honorable list of the Members of the house of assembly,

this Land must be invaluable. Here may they, surrounded by the wealth of the Colony, retire to their couch after the toil of a nois turbulent debate, and rest as 'twere on the still Silvery Lake.

Here may they renew their strength for the affray, and thus hand down their names to posterity, as the defenders of their Country's Laws and their Countrymen's Rights.

It is useless to point out, that the Governmen has now thoroughly repaired the Roads, so that either to Pedestrians or Equestrians, it is merely arecreative journey. And inconclusion, although J. T. W. feels himself perfectly unequal to the task of description in this case, he begs that deficiency may be made up by intending purchasers visiting the spot—a sight of which will be sufficient to ensure a warm competition for LITERATURE.

LEILA; OR, THE SIEGE OF GRANADA, AND CALDERON THE COURTIER. BY THE AU-THOR OF "EUGENE ARAM."-The first story or tale relates to the expulsion of the Moors from the kingdom of Granada, and the period of action is, therefore, contemporary with the reign of our Henry VII. The Spanish Army of Ferdinand and Isabella are besieging the city of Granada, and the Moorish King, with a very odd name, Boabdil, is represented in his Oriental splendours, at one moment enjoying the luxuries of a herem, and at another raving with anxieties upon the fate of his throne and kingdom. Almamen is a Jew, whose father had been killed by the Moors. This Almamen insinuates himself into the good graces and friendship of the Moorish King, and acquires his confidence in order to betray him to Ferdinand. Almamen misleads the Moor into several disasterous actions, and at last, on the eve of a final battle, he persuades him to imprison Muza, on the charge of his having intentions upon the throne. This Muza was the only General that could have saved his army and kingdom. Almamen now hastens to Ferdinand and forms a treaty, by which it is stipulated that he will betray the City of Granada into the hands of the besiegers; and Ferdinand agrees to grant the freedom of the Jews as soon as he acquires the conquest. Almamen's daughter, Leila, is given as a hostage for the treaty, and is taken under the protection of Isabel Queen of Spain, and becomes the object of the improper solicitations of the Prince, her son, and she is eventually induced to enter a convent and turn to the Christian Faith. In the meantime, Almamen's treachery is discovered, and he becomes the victim of both parties, and endeavours to get possession of his daughter, in order to escape to Africa, that he might separate her from the Prince as well as from Muza, with whom she is in love. Almamen escapes the pursuit of both Moors and Christians. and enters the Convent just as Leila is about to take the veil at the altar. Full of horror at her turning renegade and an apostate from the creed of her forefathers, he plunges a dagger into her heart, and Muza arrives just in time to receive her dying in his arms. Granada surrenders. when the Jew is again seen heading the mob.—The King issues from his palace and addresses the people on their error in appearing in arms after the capitulation has been signed, and the crowd being enraged at having been misled tear the Jew to pieves. The stern character of the Moorish Queen, the mother of Boabdil, is beautifully contrasted with that of the affectionate and gentle Amine, the favourite slave of the Moorish King. There are numerous other characters in the work, but the above is only the outline of this, the longer and better of the two stories. The following is just the close of

THE LAST BATTLE BETWEEN THE MOORS AND CHRISTIANS.

The battle had now gathered to a vortex Muza and his cavalry had joined Boabdil and the Moorish foot. On the other hand, Villena had been re-inforced by detachments, that, in almost every other quarter of the field had routed The Moors had been driven back though inch by inch; they were now in the broad space before the very walls of the city, which were crowded with the pale and anxious faces of the aged and the women; and, at se in the artillery, the spake of HOME were borne by that lurid air to the cars of the Infidels. The shout that ran through the Christian force, as Ferdinand ed it, struck like a death knell upon the last hope of Boabdil. But the blood of his fierce ancestry burned in his veins, and the cheering vice of Almamen, whom nothing daunted, inspired him with a kind of super stitious frenzy. "King against king—so be it! let Allak decide between us," cried the Moorish monarch. "Bind up this wound—'tis well.
A steed for the santon! Now, my prophet and A steed for the santon! Now, my prophet and my friend, mount by the side of thy king—let us at least, fall together, Lelilies! lelilies! Throughout the brave Christian ranks, went a thrill of reluctant admiration, as they the Paynim king, conspicuous by his fair beard and the jewels of his harness, lead the scanty guard yet left to him once more into the thickest of their lines. Simultaneously, Muza and his zegris made their fiery charge, and the Moorish infantry, excited by the example of their leaders. followed with unslackened and dogged zeal The Christians gave way—they were beaten back; Ferdinand spurred forward; and ere either party were well aware of it, both kings had met in the same melee: all order and disci pline, for the moment, lost, general monarch were, as common soldiers, fighting hand to hand. It was then that Ferninand after bearing down before his lance Naim Redoun, second only to Muza in the songs of Granada, beheld opposed to him a strange form, that seemed to that Royal Christian rather fiend than man: his raven hair and beard, clotted with blood, hung like snakes against a countenance whose features, naturally formed to give expression to the darkest passions, were distorted with the madness of despairing rage. Wounded in many places, the blood dabbled his mail: his head, he waved the banner wrought with mystic characters, while Ferdinand had already been taught to believe the work manship of demons. "Now, perjured King of the Nazarenes!" shouted this formidable champion, "we meet" at last!-no longer host and guest, monarch and dervise, but man to man! I am a Malmamen! Die!" He spoke; sword descended so fiercely on that anointed head, that Ferdinand bent to his sad But the King quickly recovered his seat, and gallantly met the encounter; it was that might have tasked the utmost prowess of his bravest knight. Passions which in their number, their nature, and their excess, animated no other champion on either side, gave to the arm of Almamen, the Israelite, a preternatural strength; his blows fell like rain upon the har ness of the King; and the fiery eyes, the gleam ing banner, of the mysterious sorcerer, who had eluded the tortures of his Inquisition,who walked unscathed through the midst of his army-whose single hand had consumed the encampment of a host filled the stout heart of the vith a belief that he encountered no earthly foe. Fortunately, perhaps, for Ferdinand and Spain, the contest did not last long. Twenty horsemen spurred into the melce to the rescue of the plumed diadem. Tendrilla arrived the first; with a stroke of his two-handed sword the white banner was cleft from his staff, and fell to the earth. At that sight, the Moors around broke forth into a wild and despairing cry; that cry spread from rank to duelling. This bill inflicts the punishment of duelling and the duelling and the duelling and the death; from five to ten years' imprisonment in the

the disaster than they turned to fly; the rout was as fatal as it was sudden. The Christian reserve, just brought into the field, poured down upon them with a simultaneous charge. Boabdil, too much engaged to be the first to learn the downfal of the sacred insignia, suddenly saw himself almost alone, with his di minished Ethiopians and a handful of his cava liers. "Yield thee, Boabdil el Chico," oried Tedrilla, from his rear, "or thou can'st not be saved." "By the Prophet, never!" exclaimed the King: and he dashed his barb against the wall of spears behind him; and, with but a score or so of his guard, cut his way through the ranks, that were not unwilling, perhaps, to spare so brave a foc. As he cleared the Spanish battalions, the unfortunate monarch checked his horse for a moment, and gazed along the plain; he beheld his army flying in all direc-tions, save in the single spot where yet glim-mered the turban of Muza Ben Abil Gazan. As he gazed, he heard the panting nostrils of the chargers behind, and saw the levelled spears of a company dispatched to take him, alive or dead, by the command of Ferdinand; he laid the reins upon his horse's neck and galloped into the city—three lances quivered against the portals as he disappeared through the shadows of the arch. But while Muza remained, all was not yet lost: he perceived the flight of the infantry and the King, and with his followers galloped across the plain; he came in time to encounter and slay, to a man, the pursuers of Boabdil,-he then threw himself before the Boaddi,—he then threw minisel before the flying Moors: "Do ye fly in the sight of your wives and daughters? Would ye not rather they beheld thee die?" A thousand voices answored him—"The banner is in the hands of swored aim.—The bather is in the analysis the infidel—all is lost!" They swept by him, and stopped not till they gained the gates. "Accursed be these spells!" cried Muza. "Were our country our only charm, that never would have been lost!" But still a small and devoted remnant of the Moorish cavaliers remained to shed a last glory over defeat itself With Muza, their soul and centre, they fought every atom of ground: it was, as the chronicle expresses it, as if they grasped the soil with their arms. Twice they charged into the midst of the foe: the slaughter they made doubled their own number; but, gathering on and clos-ing in, squadron, upon squadron, came the whole Christian army,—they were encompassed, wearied out, beaten back, as by an ocean. Like wild beasts, driven, at length, to their lair, they retreated with their faces to the foe; and when Muza came, the last,-his cimetar shivered to the hilt,-he had scarcely breath to command the gates to be closed and the port cullis lowered, ere he fell from his charger sudden and deadly swoon, caused less by his exhaustion than his agony and shame. So ends the last battle fought for the Monarchy of Gra-

THE MISER'S GRAVE .- "Hans Pfennig," said

the old tailor, "lived in the town of Cuxhaven.

He had been a merchant in his younger time, and had returned from a far land to die in his first home. He was so old, no man remembered him a child. He lived, solitary as a raven—and like the raven, was shunned as an evil omen. He was known to have the wealth of a king, and yet he wore the rags and ate the scrapes of a beggar. He was a man to make men shudde as they looked upon him -mothers would catch their children up from his path, and flee away with them as from a fasting wolf; and so he lived with the hate of his neighbours breathing upon him. Days, and weeks, and months passed, and no man had seen Hans Pfennig. priest and some of the townsfolk bent their way to the lonely hovel of the miser. There they naused, and looked in the face of one another for the door of the hut was closed, and long grass waved before it. The door, by order of the priest, was broken in, and Hans Pfennig was found, scated in his chair, dead and withered The hut was raneacked, and oh! the gold and jewels dug into the light of day. The shed stood upon a mine of buried wealth. Well, a distant heir was found; and the bell was tolled, and the nerr was found; and the pell was folled, and the grave was dug for Hans Pfennig. The day of burial came, and if the dead might be made to move the body of Hans Pfennig had sat up in its coffin, tortured back to life, by the gold bestured was the sate Named to the pell was to leave the sate of the pell was to life, by the gold bestured to the pell was to leave the sate of the pell was to leave the sate of the pell was to leave the sate of the pell was to leave the pell was to leav towed upon its dust.—Never since man returned to clay, had simple citizen been so attended! The bearers brought the body to the grave, the coffin was slung within the ropes, and every eye was bent upon the bier descending to the bottom. The ropes were found too short, and staringly and silently the diggers tied more rope to either end: they lowered, and lowered, and again the 'More rope,' cried the grey-haired sexton, and shook his palsied hands, and the people at the grave, as if death struck, and the priest made the holy sign and the cross was raised. 'The belfry, the belfry,' cried the sexton, and two men ran to the church and brough back a coil of ropes, anew provided for the bells. Again they give more rope, and the body of the miser sinks and sinks. 'Pull up the corse,' exclaimed the priest; and twenty men tug at the rope, but cannot lift the dead. As they paused, they hear a clawing at the bottom of the coffin with smothered shricks of laughter. Agast, they quit the rope, when the coffin rushes—rushes—down as into the unfathomable abyss! 'Who dug the grave? 'I -ten feet deep,' cried the sexton. 'Not you, sexton, not you,' said an old monk. 'Last night I walked here, and I saw things not of this world digging on this spot. There was moonlight, and I saw the glittering 'Golden spades,' cried of their golden spades! the young heir. 'Ay, son; they make the miser's last bed; for he who hoards the treasures of this world, and looks unmoved at the world's misery, has just this reward—his grave is dug by devils with a golden spade! - Men of Character.

AMERICAN AMELIORATIONS .- The horrible tragedy enacted the other day in Arkansaswhen the speaker of the State Assembly came down from the chair and deliberately stabbed to leath one of the members, with his Bowie knife, in the presence of the whole House; and that more recent tragedy in which two members of Congress fired at each other with rifles until one of them were killed;—seems to have awakened some sense of shame in the American Legisla. tures which may lead to the total repression of such ferocious outrages upon humanity.—On the 31st ultimo, the following Resolution, proposed in the Virginia House of Delegates, was received on all sides of the House with loud cries of "agreed, agreed, agreed."—"That the committee for courts of justice, be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for the punishment of all persons, by fine or im-prisonment or both, who may habitually carry pistols, dirks, Bowie knives, or any other concealed instrument of death, about their persons in public."—In congress too on, the same day a bill was introduced for the total suppression of duelling. Liportant Article of Food for Horses, Does, &c.—When the duty on sage was two guineas per cwt. and the important price from two to six guineas in addition, it was merely used as a de icacy, and as food for invalids. Of late the duty having been reduced to one shilling per cwt. and the import price from ten to sevencen shillings, it costs only half the price of Carolina rice, goes twice as far, and is very superior.—As part substitute for milk in feeding calves it is found very valuable: the method of using it is to sprinkle one pint of nearl sago into three quarts of boiling water on the fire, keep stirring, and in less than ten minutes you have a strong jelly, which, mixed with the same quantity of milk, is found to be a saving of half the milk, and the calves do better with it. Several gentlemen are now feeding their greyhounds upon it, boiled as above, then poured over biscuit or bread, instead of broth or jelly made from meat, and find it very superior, saving three fourths of both expense and trouble, at the same time keeping their greyhounds in much better condition. To those who keep packs of hounds this will be found a most important discovery. One of the largest horse proprietors in the kingdom is using it as food for them with great satisfaction.

QUICKSILVER TREE.—In the valley of Lancy which runs between the mountains of Turin there grows a plant called dorinicum, in the roots of which pure mercury is found, and may be separated by a very simple process. The writer tells us, that if a quantity of the juice be ex-pressed and exposed to the air to evaporate slowly, there will be found as much mercury in the remainder as there has been liquid matter evaporated; but this must be done in the night, and when the air is clear.

Tossing Pancakes .- A custom exists here at St. Peter's College, Westminster, of the cook, on Shrove Tuesday, coming into the school, and from a silver frying-pan en deavouring to toss a pancake over a bar fixed a considerable height from the ground. If he succeeds he receives a present from the dean; if he fails he has only his labourfor his pains. In either case the pancake constitutes a scramble for the boys.—The origin of this singular custom is lost in its antiquity.

Coffee.—The discovery of coffee was not made until the latter part of the thirteenth century, and like many other great discoveries, it was the result of chance, and adopted by neces sity. An Arab, the Shekh Omar, fell under per-secution in his own country; he and his disciples fled to a mountain in the province of the Yomen, where, in the desert, all usual food failed him; a coffee berry there prew wild, and the distressed refugee, and it was too hard to masticate. tried its effect in boiling; he drank the liquor, found himself revived, and made immortal. Yet ecommended as it was by its refreshing properties, its spontaneous growth, and still more, by the example of one who called himself a saint, coffee took upwards of two centuries to make its way in the world.

How to get a Lift .- " Pray," said Mr. - to the Hon. "," will you have the complaisance to take my great coat in your carriage to town?" "With pleasure; but how will you get it again?" "O, very easily," replied the modest applicant; "I shall remain in it."

A Yankee pedlar is making his fortune in the valley of the Mississipi by selling purely vegetable pills for the cure of fever and ague, and other diseases. The pills are peas soaked in a solution of liquorice!

An improvement has just been made in the pianoforte, which consists in the application of pedals similar to those of the organ, and used in the same manner; by means of which an additional part, played by the feet, is added to the harmony produced by the hands. EXTRAORDINARY PERFORMANCE .- One of the reatest equestrian performances on record took place last Friday afternoon, on Sudbury Comnon, in the presence of several sporting gentle men of distinction, although the attendance was not so considerable as the merits of the under taking would have warranted. evidently been a desire on the part of some of the persons connected with the match not to give it too much publicity, and many were the rumours as to the precise day on which it would come off. The undertaking was to perform in saddle twenty miles in one hour; and it will be nere necessary to state that the same mare did the distance on Saturday fortnight, carrying out 9st. 6lbs., but only won on that occasion by eight seconds. Much doubt was expressed it the conclusion of that performance whether she could ever do it again, and the question of her carrying a man of much greater weight was agitated. Mr. Whitfield, the proprietor of the mare, undertook that he would back her to do it if Mr. Savage a twelve stone man, would ride The latter consented, and time was backed to an immense extent 6 to 4, although the actual money down was only £50 aside. The affair was arranged a fortnight ago, and Mr. Savage immediately went into hard, and what is termed sweating training, in order to reduce his weight as much as possible. No specific day had been named in the articles, although there derstanding that the match should take place within the year (1837), and this circumstance ac-accounts for the attendance not being immense. Several were of opinion that it would take place of Tuesday, and there was a pretty tolerable muster on that day: others believed it to be on Saturday and some few were fortunate enough to know it was Friday, on which day, at a little before one, she started -The mare, which is a bay, fifteen hands high, had been very admirably trained at Smithambottom, and was brought to Hampton by Mr. Pearce, who had charge of her, Thursday night. She was put up at Lawrence's, the Red Lion, and when brought out the next morning looked beautifully. The effect of train ing was equally apparent in Mr. Savage; he had reduced his weight to 10s. 11lbs, in the short interval which had elapsed from the time of making the match, and the whole of the weight she had to carry, including saddle, &c., was 11s. 5lb. The first five miles were done in fourteen minutes and thirty seconds, and the second at about the rate of thirteen minutes fifty seconds, as near as could be judged; but an accident oc curred when within a quarter of a mile of the starting post, which created much consternation. The stirrip-leather broke, and from the immedi ate change in the position of her rider the mare became alarmed, and but for the splendid horsemanship shown must have lost the match; two to one against her was being freely offered. The mare was checked for about a minute, and anotherstirrup put on, and then went off at full speed.

CIRCUMSTANCIAL EVIDENCE. - The Boston Mercantile Journal, gives the following remarka-ble case of murder, and conviction of an innoceiving a challenge; and from three to gears' imprisonment for assaulting, abusing, or defaming, the refuser of a challenge.—This Bill cent person, as illustrating the uncertainty of circumstantial evidence. The journal also employs it as an argument against capital punishment of the local punishment against capital ment;—"A negro who had run away from his master in South Carolina, arrived in London in an American ship. Soon after he landed he got acquainted with a poor honest laundress in Wapping, who washed his linen. The poor woman usually wore two gold rings on one of her fingers; and it was said that she had saved a little money, which induced this wretch to conceive the design of murdering her, and taking her property. She was a widow, and lived in a humble dwelling with her nephew. One night her nephew came home much intoxi cated, and was put to bed. The negro, who was aware of the circumstance thought this would be a favourable opportunity for executing his bloody design. Accordingly, he climbed to the top of the house, stripped himself naked, and descended through the chimney to the apart ment of the laundress, whom he murdered until after a sever struggle, the noise of which awoke her drunken nephew, in the adjoining room, who got up and hastened to the rescue of his aunt. In the meantime the villain had cut off the finger with the rings, but before he could escape, he was grappled with by the nephew, who being a very powerful man, though much intoxicated, very nearly overpowered him, when by the light of the moon which shone through th vindow, he discovered the complexion of the villain, whom, having seldom seen a negro, he took for the devil! The murderer then disengaged himself from the grasp of the nephew, and suc ceeded in making his escape through the chim ney. But the nephew believed, and ever after wards declared, that it was the devil with whon he had struggled, and who had suddenly flown into the air and disappeared. The negro in the course of the struggle had besn ared the young man's shirt in many places with the blood of his victim, and this, joined with others circumstances, induced his neighbours to consider the nephew as the murderer of his aunt. He was arrested; examined, and committed to prion though he persisted in asserting his innocence and told his story of the midnight visitor, which appeared not only improbable, but ridiculous in the extreme. He was tried, convicted, and exe ented, protesting to the last his total ignorance of the murder, and throwing it wholly on his black antagonist, whom he believed to be no other than Satan. The real murderer was not suspected, and returned to America with little booty; but after a wretched existence of 10 years, on his death bcd, confessed the murder and related the particulars attending it."

MARRIED AND SINGLE. - I went to a neigh bour and solicited a donation for public objects he replied, "I approve your object, and would assist you, but you know I have a family, and 'Charity begins at home.'" THE NORFOLK PHENOMENON was got by the Norfolk Cob, (the Dam of the Norfolk Cob was got by Old Marshland Sholes) late the Cob was got by Old Marshland Sholes) late the property of Mr. Wright Rougham, Norfolk, now in the possession of John Theobald, Stockwell, Surrey, and named by him the Norfolk Phenomenon, and was out of a Pretender Mare by Old Fireaway, his grandsire, Young Fireway, bred by Mr. Burgess' Well fen Norfolk, and for whose performances see the Sporting Magazine, March 1822; great Grandsire Old Fireaway, the property of Mr. R. West, Gayewood, Norfolk, great Grandsire Pretender, from whose stock the origina' Fireaway descended. (Pretender was a chesnut foaled in 1771, by Murske, the Sire of Fedines, big Down by Princeton of Eclipse—his Dam by Bajazet, a son of the Godolphia Arabian.) Young Fireaway challenged all England, in July 1819, and beat a lenged all England, in July 1819, and beat a celebrated Black Mare, the property of Mr. Slade, on Sunbury Common, for Four Hundred Guineas, besides by ematches—challenged all England again, and no takers. Young Fire away was a roan chesnut, nearly sixteen hands high, and equal to twenty stone

"THE NORFOLK PHENOMENON is a roan Horse, bred in 1825, by Mr. Bond of Caw ston, Norfolk, whose property he still remains; his dam was a very fast trotter, and never was heaten—she bred Mr. Bond many valuable Horses, (eight of which he has sold for £1080) exclusive of the Phenomenon, which now stands first on the list as a Norfolk Trotter, allowed by all competent judges to be one of the best and fastest trotters ever shewn in any public market, from his superiority of muscular strength, reach and rapidity of action, it is doubted whether there be a Horse in England that can go with
